

Big picture

As ever the Royal College of Art's Show One threw up some wonderful ideas. None we felt was better than this. In a photography section that was full of high-quality portrait work, Eva Stenram's image The Royal Estate leapt out. The idea behind the shot is simple: how would it look if you turned the Royal residences into tower blocks? It's a comment on the nation's disparity of wealth and use of land (as well, we think, as being an interesting model for how to house the Windsors in the future). Eva photographed the seven palaces before doing some serious Photoshopping – the result is breathtaking.

The Show One ran from 30 May-8 June. For more on Eva Stenram see www.evastenram.co.uk